

New Jersey is a very small state, sandwiched between NYC and Philadelphia, and gets radio interference from all of the stations in both metros. The only way NJ stations can cover their existing listeners is to extend protection for Class A stations to the 44 dbu curve. The FCC short changed NJ in its table of allocations and this is a bandaid that could help, but not fix the NJ FM stations shortspaced situations.

Phil Roberts